ZEAL

When I was a little boy I attended choir practice at church each week. We choirboys stood in front of the Organ, and each week I read the inscription affixed to it, which I can still remember. The name of the man in whose memory it had been given was followed by the words 'who, if in this life, would have zealously advocated the gift'. I was fascinated by the word 'zealously', which I'd never met before. I'd no idea what it meant. I now know from the CONCISE OXFORD DICTIONARY that 'zeal' means 'fervour in advancing a cause'.

I read with dismay in today's TELEGRAPH (May 17th) that 'Christianity is facing a catastrophic collapse in Britain', and that 'one in 10 under-25s in Britain is now a Muslim'. What has gone wrong, what indeed IS so profoundly wrong with the Church that this is taking place?

One fundamental thing, I think, is a lack of zeal in so many Christians, a lack of a deep-seated 'fervour in advancing the cause' of Christianity. So many Christians, indeed Catholics, seem look-warm, without deep faith and conviction. So many are casual about attending Sunday Mass. So many don't bother about Confession, and most probably about daily private prayer. How few parents take the trouble to actually bring their children up in the Faith, teaching them our Christian beliefs, teaching them to them to pray, setting them an example of faithful Mass attendance. So little fervour, so little zeal.

How very different it is in Islam! Muslims, it seems, do have fervour, do have zeal. They know the Koran, and live by it strictly and faithfully. Their times of prayer and worship are sacred, and observed with care. They are eager to communicate their faith. And so they are advancing.

Until we as Catholics recapture our zeal, our ardour, our fervour, we will continue to decline, and indeed will deserve to do so. As we celebrate Pentecost today, the Coming of God the Holy Spirit to the Church under the signs of Wind and Fire, let us pray that He may set the Church of the present day on fire, and make it burn with zeal. But that can only happen if we truly will it to be so
